

Building Relationships with Infants and Toddlers and Their Families— The Foundation of Educational Quality

A three part series

Kay Albrecht, Ph.D. and Alyssa Countryman, M.S.

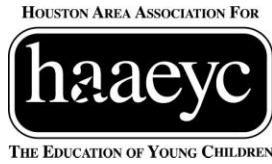

This three part series sponsored by the Workforce Solutions and organized by Collaborative for Children and HAAEYC will help you improve the quality of your infant and toddler program for children, teachers, and families. Sessions will include hands-on activities, discussion time, and "make-and-take" stations. Attend this series in teams that include a manager (the director or program/curriculum coordinator) and infant and toddler teachers. Together, you can do great things!

Managers will:

1. Determine the number of transitions children have to make daily and across the program year and assess the impact of programmatic changes on the development of attachment relationships.
2. Develop a plan to decrease the number of programmatic transitions children have to make daily and across the program year.

Managers and teachers will:

1. Understand the long-term impact that first relationships have on infant and toddler development in all domains.
2. Demonstrate three relationship-building strategies (from over 10 strategies learned in the three training sessions).
3. Plan developmentally and culturally appropriate curriculum activities to use with infants and toddlers.
4. Plan three relationship-building activities to implement both with children and with families.
5. Implement primary teaching as a strategy for building relationships with children and families.
